Algoma University has been offering undergraduate liberal arts and science degrees for more than 40 years. Our main campus in Sault Ste Marie has an educational history that goes back to 1873, when a school for Anishinaabe children was established by Garden River First Nation and the Anglican Church. In memory of the history of the campus, Algoma University has signed a sacred Covenant with the Shingwauk Education Trust, to work in partnership to establish Shingwauk Kinoomaage Gamig.

Algoma University offers the country's only BA in Anishinaabemowin, and the only BA in Community Economic and Social Development, along with close to 40 other university degrees in business, history, sociology, psychology, computer science, and more.
