Community Economic and Social Development

Community Economic and Social Development (CESD) is a four year interdisciplinary degree program that includes courses from Sociology, Economics, Social Welfare, Political Science, Business Admin, Geography and others. It also has a series of compulsory courses in CESD which explore community processes and draw the disciplines together. CESD promotes the growth of more sustainable communities, economically, ecologically, socially, and culturally.

- Strategies for sustainable development in rural areas, municipalities and First Nations communities
- The practice of community-based research and Community Economic Development (CED)
- A holistic approach to community development that derives from multiple disciplines (Social/ Economic/ Cultural/ Environmental)
- How community development is practiced through student placements with community organizations
